SCHOOL REPORT.

The past year unexpectedly found an entirely new board in charge of the schools. Resignation of one, and death of another, member of the board as constituted at the close of the school meeting last spring, deprived the district of services valuable not more on account of experience than because of those members' intrinsic fitness for the respective positions they filled.

The new committee has directed and studied the workings of the schools during the year, and is able to say that they are collectively and individually satisfied with the capabilities and efforts displayed by the teachers through the new attainments demonstrated by the scholars at the end of their year's work.

The canvass of the district by the truant officer, as required by law, found one hundred and sixty-eight scholars of school age; eighty-five boys and eighty-three girls. That officer reports only two such scholars in town not attending school, and these having a justifiable excuse.

The only addition to the working apparatus of the schools during the year has been a set of outline maps for five of the school rooms.

Of the reforms that are always open to committees, the only one this committee has attempted to deal with is that of drawing the schools into such concentrated condition as the continual contracting of the number of scholars in many sections of the town seemed to make advisable. The Chester Road and the South Road schools were closed and the scholars in their localities, living too far away to be reasonably expected to walk there, were transported to the school at the Corner. This was done at less expense than would have been the keeping open either one of the closed schools, and, as the committee believe, to the intellectual advantage of all the schools concerned in the union. Other concentrations the committee also believe could be made with equal profit financially and intellectually.

The matter of text-books, another always vital question, the committee has not attempted to deal with. They believe one of the best solutions of that question is to use the funds of the district in such a way as to make it possible to employ teachers with sufficiently broad guaged fitness for their work that the text books in use shall be, in their hands, merely nucleus of what should be taught of the subject the text book represents. To this end the committee believe that when a teacher has been found competent to take a school through a common school curriculum, that teacher should be kept through the course if possible. It takes a term or more for teacher and scholars to try each other out, and become a school workshop with the teacher governmentally, systematically and educationally valuable. Therefore the committee believe it unwise to keep a school in a continual turmoil of try outs with new teachers.

The amount of school money the past year has been more than sufficient for the needs of the year. This resulted from the fact that a larger amount was required to be raised by law than ever before, coupled with the fact that several of the teachers, as inexperienced candidates, were employed at a smaller salary than they could be expected to teach for, after the experience which always enhances teaching value. The surplus should be made the basis of a careful estimate of the amount actually needed for another year rather than a general and indefinite reason for not raising any amount for the coming year.

The visitors column of the registers indicate the great interest the parents and friends have taken in the schools; something that teachers and scholars are always greatly helped and encouraged by.

The details of the year's Roll of Honor, Statistical Table. Receipts and Disbursements, are found in their proper place.
